

The Darling

The financial manager Finagle is a guest at the home of the Economist Fraudson and they sit together in a sofa and discuss serious and engaging subjects.

The matters concern methods in order to rob the share-holders from their money using financial manipulations and other creative possibilities.

They discuss with high voices and later on they feel they want must take a little break with coffe.

Fraudson says to Finagle:

”What about a little cup of coffe with a Cognac? Will this be OK?”

”Absolutely!”

Fraudson shouts towards the kitchen, where his wife potters about:

”Darling! Please fix a couple of cups Café Normal to us!”

Finagle is surprised to hear the nice expression to the wife. He says with consternation to Fraudson:

”But what about that! Do you still call your wife Darling? I have skipped such things since a long time ago!”

Fraudson looks Finagle right into his eyes :

”But the case is that I have forgotten her name!”

Sens moral: For some persons manipulations and intrigues are all of importance! Wife and family are second hand matters!